(a) Start with adding images

On their product pages alone, You can add up to eight or more photos along with videos as well. Utilize all the slots of images by showcasing all your feature of the products since users rely on images to make purchase decisions.

(B) Optimize Title

It is the first thing a customer sees on your product page. So it should concisely explain what your product is and not what it does (keep that for product overview). Don't just stuff keywords – too long, confusing, and poorly formatted titles can jeopardize the sale. Bad titles don't just turn off the shoppers but might also reduce the relevance of the product.

Here are a few tips:

- The first few characters of the title are very important (for mobiles shoppers)
- Include a unique product feature in the first 80 characters
- Capitalize the first letter of every word except conjunctions
- Write packaging or any other important information right after the root keyword
- Do not use ALL CAPS
- Spell the measurements (e.g., inches and not “)

(c) Keep your product overview and features concise

Product overviews are essential for highlighting your brand story and ethics. This is your chance to describe everything about the customer's problem and how your product is their ideal solution. Include a bit of storytelling and craft a compelling description that will connect with the buyer's feelings. It is recommended to keep the description keyword optimized but try to make them sound natural.

(d) Informative Brand Comparison Charts to Shorten the Path to Purchase

The comparison charts focus on descriptive, informative content that simplifies technical information and helps consumers better understand features, benefits, and terminology across similar products. In addition to reducing the path to purchase, it also provides value to the customer, increases sales, and reduces returns.

5. Upload Your Offers

BestBuy stores require you to upload inventory and prices, which are collectively referred to as 'offers.' While this process can be done manually, it is highly recommended that you automate it by integrating your data directly into the Best Buy Marketplace.
