What is Amazon listing optimization and Why is it Necessary?

Amazon listing optimization is the process of improving product pages so that they appear higher in search results, and have a higher CTR and conversion rate. Optimization of your listing on Amazon is necessary to rank as highly as possible in the search results. The changes in the front and back-end of your product listings are one of the factors through which increase or fall in Amazon search engine results of your product are decided. The number of people who see your product's page and make a purchase is another important factor in determining where your product appears in search results.

Benefits of Prime Day

In addition to the dramatic rise in sales that several brands have on Prime Day, the following are some advantages:

- To make the most of this one-day event, Amazon ramps up its marketing efforts, both on and off the site.
- Discounted pricing can intrigue a sense of curiosity. If you offer special deals on Prime Day, you may find a hike as well in sales and user engagement.
- Products offering Prime Day discounts are marked with unique badges, making it very easy for customers to locate them which increases visibility.

Check the “Retail Readiness” of your listings

Remember that when purchasing online, a customer cannot touch or feel a product. As a result, the only way he or she can evaluate the caliber of a product is by reviewing the complete product information page.

You shouldn't anticipate a rise in sales during the Prime Day Sale unless your product's description page isn't presented properly!

Even though it's critical that you attract customers to your product detail pages with the correct keyword and ads, it's also essential that they have a pleasant experience once they've been there

Most customers use these actions to learn more about a particular product:

- Go through product images
- Examine the product's description
- Look for the product's essential characteristics listed in bullet points
- Look up product ratings and reviews

Have a clear product title

A buyer reads the title of your product first when they visit the product detail page. This means that it needs to be optimized well enough to draw in potential customers. Never create a title that explains what your product does. Rather, save this information for description. Always include the necessary details (such as material, dimensions, model, and weight..), along with your most important keywords placed at the start of the title.

- Appropriate title structure
- All important keywords mapped
- Increases organic visibility

Use eye-catching images

Images can stimulate a person’s senses and emotions, as well as help to solidify the identity of a brand. Because a consumer cannot physically touch the object, the only way for them to form an opinion about the product is by looking at images of it. Use 6-7 images on your detail page; the 1st will be your primary image of the product, while the following images will highlight its quality, draw attention to its various parts/features, show off its texture, or even display it from various angles.

The purpose of these pictures is to display the product in its entirety. The best features of the product are listed in images 4 and 5th, these may include information on the following topics: product specifications, features, product comparisons, certifications, accessories, and usage guidelines. Your lifestyle pictures will be on the 6th and 7th.
